In this article I will tell you how to use the FunSploit tool to capture HTTP traffic from the PC remotely. By using this method you can capture the data from the target PC in the most stealth mode. To do this you need to download FunSploit from the developers site, and install it on the machine you want to capture the traffic from. Configure your firewall settings to allow the requests to pass through. Now get the required domain or IP address of the PC you want to capture from, and run FunSploit. Once you start the tool, you will be required to authenticate by allowing the server to access your account, you do this by selecting 'Let the server use my account' followed by entering your Skype username, password and if needed OAuth credentials. Now select the application you want to capture using, Skype, MSN Messenger and more are listed in the options. In this case let's just focus on Skype. After selecting Skype you will be asked to provide your target computer's IP address that you want to capture from. You can enter your own target computer's IP address or a public one, I will be using the public IP address of Google's IP address since this is very frequently used. I don't recommend using a trusted IP address as it may expose your IP address to others. After entering the target's IP address FunSploit will start capturing and storing the data on the location you provided. Let's see how this works. FunSploit Automated Spoofing FunSploit appears to be a simple tool, however, this is misleading as you'll soon learn, it's not as simple as it seems. It was initially developed by a security researcher who wishes to remain anonymous, however, it was later on forked by another developer who can be identified by his user name :bsl. He did a good job of keeping the current author alive by giving an update roadmap for future improvements and releases. The current version of FunSploit is 1.15.0. This is a very small update as opposed to the stable releases, this is to get the software in the hands of security researchers and hackers. Over the past couple of weeks I've been working with FunSploit for the
