Q: Java: keeping a singleton alive for a few minutes I have a singleton on the server that processes a few incoming requests. If there are more than a couple hundred of them, then the server may run out of memory. How do I keep this singleton alive for a few minutes so that the memory is cleared by garbage collection? A: javax.management.MBeanServer provides an implementation of the javax.management.MBeanRegistration interface. All the types in this interface have some kind of way to register() an MBean, and have a no-argument remove() method for removing an MBean from the MBeanServer. So, you just need to register() your singleton, then, when it is time for it to be garbage collected, you call MBeanServer's remove(ObjectName, MBeanServerNotification[]), passing it a Notification object which has a Notify() method and a no-argument notify() method. The Notification tells the MBeanServer that a particular MBean is to be garbage collected, and how many MBeans (or their Notifications) are to be removed. Reduction of specific conformation in tyrosyl residue of ribosomal protein S3 in the non-ribosomal chaperone action of Escherichia coli GroEL. We previously isolated three different but conserved cysteine residues in the cytoplasmic domain of Escherichia coli ribosomal protein S3 (S3), designated as cysteines 46, 47, and 48, by mass spectrometry. The cysteine residues in S3 are numbered according to the sequence of E. coli ribosomal protein S3 (S3) with a first methionine residue. These cysteine residues are conserved in many other prokaryotes, eukaryotes, and archaea. Cysteine 47 in S3 is located in the putative transmembr 1cb139a0ed
