I'm trying to generate an audio signal from a microphone input as a test for sending audio over the network. I need to know for sure that the microphone is connected for the rest of my program to use it; and at the moment when I don't know whether or not the microphone is connected I miss out all the time, because the program uses the audio from the microphone before the user has connected it. Is there a way to detect whether or not a microphone input is connected? A: It doesn't appear that the microphone is designed to do this, but the Microphone API allows you to detect the state of the stream. Essentially, if the state is not MICROPHONE_RECORDING_IN_PROGRESS you have a microphone connected. I'm going to go out on a limb and say this would be useful to you as a test for the microphone being connected. Google it, there are lots of discussion on it online. A: Use the MicrophoneCapture and MicrophoneStateChanged events. You should find them in Windows.Media.Capture namespace. form input { width: 100%; font-size: 24px; } form label { font-size: 22px; } form #plugin-select { width: 600px; } form #jslibs-select, form #jslibs-select.dark, form #jslibs-select.light { width: 98%; } form #jslibs-select.dark { width: 70%; } form #jslibs-select.light { width: 96%; } form #jslibs-select.not_installed, form #jslibs-select.standard, form #jslibs-select.extended { width: 66%; } form #jslibs-select.not_installed, form #jslibs-select.standard, form #jsl 570a42141b
