EditVar is a utility which allows a user to edit a variable by entering it as a parameter to the program. When the program receives input for the variable if the user exits without changing it. If you edit a variable with EditVar will place it in the user's environment, as though the user had typed it. EditVar will write the variable is changed and the user presses enter, EditVar will write the variable to the parent environment as though it had been typed. You can use this to create a "canned" text file for a batch file that will always run. If a variable is set to the same value as a previous variable, EditVar will not prompt you for the variable. Try running "set X=" and then pressing Enter. It will not ask you to edit X. EditVar will not prompt you to edit the contents of the environment. EditVar can also be run from an MS-DOS window. Choose is a program which allows a user to enter options when a batch file is run. Choose will display a menu of options with a default selection will be used as the command line option. The user may also specify that no options be entered. This means that the default selection will be used as the command. See "Available Options" for more information about available commands. You can provide a time limit for choosing the default option, after which the user will be prompted to select one of the other options. You may set a user defined selection (if you wish to have the same default option twice in your program). Choose does not affect the environment, so you do not need to use Set or Get. Choose is not a one-shot batch file utility. It lets you choose a value for the first time and remember it for future runs. It does not have a "memory" or "repeat" feature like Microsoft's Choice tool. It may be useful to set an option that is needed only for one run of a batch file.
