Boris Johnson has said the UK's Brexit deal "might take a little while longer" to be agreed, which could lead to the government being unable to ratify the agreement before the deadline set for the UK's departure from the EU on October 31. Speaking at the Brussels summit, Mr Johnson said the UK wants an agreement by October and if it had to go beyond that, "so be it". "This is clearly a crunch moment and we must all do what we can to make sure that the conditions are set to make a successful trade and economic partnership between the United Kingdom and the European Union," he said. He said the EU was "not at all" looking for an extension to the Article 50 exit date and has "every interest in making sure that an agreement is reached by the 31 October". "But if, after the 31 October, we haven't found a solution to that question, then we are in a position, of course, to have to extend," he added. Ayesha Hazarika, BBC News Europe correspondent EU officials privately believe Boris Johnson is bluffing when he says he could reject an agreement and bring the UK crashing out of the EU. The EU's chief Brexit negotiator Michel Barnier has told French newspaper Le Monde this is a "virtual" possibility, although EU leaders have repeatedly stated that no such scenario would happen. But the Leave-supporting former foreign secretary Boris Johnson has a track record for saying anything to get his way on Brexit. More crucial to the negotiations, which have been somewhat derailed by the Commons vote last week, is how, if at all, the 570a42141b
