Police and fire often get ignored or overlooked for funding, but they serve the same function of protecting and caring for people. As temperatures and fires increase, it's important that both police and fire are in the budget process so they can plan and be ready for when firefighters and police are needed. A

Tulsa World investigation found that some local fire and police departments face budget cuts that would be in the tens of millions of dollars. Tulsa County's fire and police agencies are facing cuts in the range of $21 million, according to research from the University of Tulsa. A loss of $21 million for a fire department would be equivalent to the city of Tulsa's entire general fund and all of its general fund reserve funds combined, the study found. The Tulsa Fire Department's annual budget is $93.1 million, according to the city. Oklahoma Firefighters Pension and Retirement System Oklahoma's public pension funds are severely underfunded. In the future, employees will face a greater share of the funding burden. Social Services Commission The Commission on Children and Youth has six directors in Tulsa. A spokeswoman for the agency said it wasn't possible to provide information about the directors because of confidentiality restrictions. David Turner, director of the Public Employees Retirement System, said in the future, more of the burden will fall on the state to fund pension plans. "We're underfunded in the state of Oklahoma by about $11 billion," he said. "So the current plans, the state's retirement plans, are not going to be there for our employees unless the employer is willing to contribute to it, and almost all are."
