Most of the edits that are made in Photoshop are fairly easy for the nonexpert to replicate, though many of them are quite intricate. Fortunately, you don't really have to learn Photoshop; you can move directly to the more specialized processes you want to learn. # PHOTOSHOP LESSON ONE: STARTING FROM SCRATCH You'll go through all this in the slow, step-by-step process from beginning to end. It's essential to have a clear mind, and you don't have to know anything about Photoshop or any of the topics covered here. Just start with blank pages and follow these steps. 1. Open a new document in Photoshop and choose File → New. Choose 8 × 10 inches. The default option of RGB Color is fine. 2. From the Layers panel, add a new layer. Choose Layer → New → Layer. 3. The default name should be _Layer 1_ (Figure 1.1). 4. Go to Layer → New → Brush and make a selection. In this case, we'll use the wind turbine at the Ritz-Carlton hotel. Choose the Brush Preset fly in the menu and select Wind Turbine (Figure 1.2). 5. Save this image as the background. Figure 1.1 : Adding a layer Figure 1.2 : Adding a new brush Let's continue with these steps: 6. Add another new layer (Layer → New → Layer) and name it _Layer 2_ (Figure

1.3). 7. Choose a very soft-edged brush from the Brush Preset menu. In this case, I'm using a soft, low-res brush to blend a circular image on a new layer (Figure 1.4). 8. Use the Move Tool to make the brush

Decide the design you want to create Before we start, it's essential to make sure you have an idea of what you want to create first. Our design is based on a 2D curved design and the theme is classic. First of all, create a new document. This way, we are sure to have enough space to work with. Then create a new layer at the very top. We will create an object mask on this layer to create a 2D curved design. Make sure you adjust the layer's Blending Mode to Soft Light or Overlay. The 2D curved design is based on the Soft Light mode. 2. Create a 2D curved design Now we're going to create the 2D curved design. First, draw a simple rounded rectangle shape (same size as the wallet). Draw the shape with the Pen tool. If you don't know how to create basic shapes, read my tutorial on how to create basic shapes. After that, use the DrawArc Tool and move the arc of the graph paper line to the inside of the rectangle. The arc should only be part of the rectangle and not include its whole shape. Draw the rectangle to the layer's Clip Path. Select this layer and go to Layer>New>Path> Add Anchor Point. Next, click the Start Ellipse button and create an ellipse. Place this ellipse to overlap the existing rectangle. Make a681f4349e

Canada has called on Quebec to repeal discriminatory legislation aimed at promoting religious schools in the province and demand the Federal Government stop funding religious schools. The call came in response to Friday's Supreme Court of Canada ruling which found Quebec's controversial religious neutrality law violates the Quebec Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms and demands the government ban conspicuous religious symbols on the front of vehicles and stop supporting faith-based schools, which make up a large majority of the province's schools. "We call upon the Parti Québécois to acknowledge the gravity of its position and to act in accordance with its values," said Tim Powers, a Liberal spokesman for Canadian Heritage. "The Quebec government would be hard-pressed to argue that they are in the best interests of either the province or its children if they continue to stand in the way of the Supreme Court of Canada directing them to end the current funding regime." Before the ruling,

Quebec has been in a legal battle with the federal government over Catholic schools. Quebec Premier Pauline Marois' government believed they were in the right to create a framework for separate secular and religious schools, which operate in Quebec under legislation passed by the Parti Québécois in 2006. In 2005, The Bloc Québécois, now led by Tom Mulcair, and the Coalition Avenir Québec, led by Francois Legault, joined forces to pass a motion which demanded the government end any funding towards Catholic schools. "Quebecers are perfectly entitled to set aside their identity. They have the right to be francophones, to be Quebecers, but they don't have the right to diminish other people's rights," Mr. Mulcair told Global News Friday. Since then, the federal government has been fighting the Supreme Court's ruling. The ruling says the government must end the funding and the legislation at the time was too vague and outdated to be the basis of its argument that Quebec's school system is secular and therefore that it can't come under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada. Mr. Powers said the ruling goes beyond secularism, and instead specifically mentions instances where governments are funding religious schools and where regulations exist which allow for this to happen. Mr. Mulcair said he's heard from some people in his riding of Outremont who believe the ruling
