Hack Facebook Account Using MD5 Hash How to hack Facebook. Advertisement I am trying to hack a facebook account via php... Is there any software or API method used by the hacker... A: Facebook uses MD5 hashes to encrypt users passwords in response to various forms of cheating and theft, such as password reuse. As such, it is impossible to recover the user's password by hacking the Facebook site or the database - but it does not seem to be possible from the client side either. As a security measure, all hashes are encrypted with a secret key using the Blowfish algorithm, resulting in a variable length hash. The hash is then salted, which is a pre-processing step to strengthen the hash. As an example, it takes less time to hash the strings "bob" and "bob", than it does to hash "bobbob", and it can only be guessed at, not told, what the hash for "bobbob" would be. Salting is said to help protect against rainbow tables, where a large database of pre-computed hashes can be used to try to guess unknown hashes. Note that all passwords are salted before being hashed into the database, and each password must be salted differently. A: Obviously it is easier to avoid someone from logging into your account because of Facebook's implementation of security. With that being said. I would say it is possible to hack the actual database using the type of vulnerability you are asking about. The main catch is that you would have to 'know' the hash of the password. Which would be extremely difficult to guess. In fact it would be impossible to have a database of all users password hashes. 1cdb36666d
