Take "Syria," for example, which is three times in one paragraph. When I see the word "Syria," I want to hear that this is a news source. "The Syrian regime's repression of peaceful protesters" is not journalism. "A Syrian protester gunned down by government forces" is a good description of a murder. But a guess who started World War I? The journalist. Tom Bennerstein, who has been covering national politics since the late 1970s, is the former managing editor of the Connecticut Post.Q: Using predicate fields in composite primary keys with NHibernate I have a SQL schema design problem with NHibernate, and I couldn't find any good answers to this, so I'll take my chances here. The schema is as follows. Project - Name - Owner Product - Name - Owner I have a project, and a product, and the product can have a project as its owner. This is OK, and standard. But, of course, I want a
