When running the Photoshop CS3 startup program, look for these two icons: Auto Save allows the computer to automatically create a backup of the file whenever you save it. Layer Masks can be used to make portions of an image invisible or visible after you've created the original image. After the original image is created, you can begin to apply changes to the image. An image can consist of a collection of layers with different effects applied to each one. You can add and delete layers to create an image without making a copy, and you can move layers around in the Layers panel to create a design that moves or rotates. You can resize and enlarge an image in the Layers panel or use the Content-Aware Fill tool to fill areas of the image that don't have a lot of detail, thus saving you time in having to redraw the image. When you're finished with an image and are satisfied with the result, you can save the image with a new name or you can save the new version of the image as a copy of the original image — a process known as `_saved state_`. You can also work on your image, and then you can use the Copy command to create a copy of the original image in case you make changes to the original image that you want to keep. After a while, you may find that you don't know where everything is in Photoshop. You may even find that you can't find your own image file, which may happen if you've deleted it accidentally or if you've saved it in a different name. In this situation, you may want to use the History panel. This panel lists the names of the image versions that you've used in the past. If you need to find a saved image, simply select it from the History panel. After you've opened a new image, how do you go about using it? You can start by looking at the on-screen controls and tools. You use the tools located in the toolbar, which may be hidden or displayed at any time as you need it. Toolbars are helpful because they give you a ready collection of tools when you need to work on an image. You can get to the toolbar by clicking the little down arrow at the far right of the workspace area. From the View menu, you can choose to display or hide the toolbar as you please.
