The introduction of "HyperMotion Technology" is the first major gameplay technology driven by motion capture in a FIFA game. As a result of the game's increased realism, players will feel more connected to the action and in-game visuals will feel more responsive. "HyperMotion Technology" can be found in all in-game action. The game features a full 360° player movement, more realistic ball physics, player reactions, goal celebrations, off-ball actions, deeper skill trees and re-designed play-making engine. "With our player-first approach, we dedicated a significant amount of attention to how technology could improve the game play experience. Our goal was to create an experience that is as good to play as it is to watch, and that allowed for a more seamless integration between players, pitch and in-game action," said Aleksandar Krstić, Creative Director at DICE. "Many of us have played the game on our smartphones and we saw how this technology was open to the public in the games of Sports Interactive and EA. Now the time has come for us to unleash FIFA 22 on the next-generation consoles!" FIFA 22 is also the first iteration of FIFA to be developed exclusively on Frostbite Engine. FIFA on Frostbite Engine will allow for superior lighting, visual effects, global illumination, improved HDR rendering and character animations. In-game lighting features various characteristics like dynamic, ambient and directional lighting, multi-layered fog systems and real-time lighting transition effects. FIFA 22 and the soon-to-be released FIFA Street, the most beautiful game in the franchise, will see FIFA's Global Edition become available on November 13 for PS4 and Xbox One and December 3 on PC.
