Having a fast commute can be important for a smooth day in your working life. If you have a car you have a relatively easy way to get between home and work, however public transportation offers a much more varied schedule than a morning drive or evening commute. Weather can also influence when you get to and from work, leaving some days where you might not be able to get home at all. And some days you might have a bad commute and have to skip work. If you have a bad commute but are also not a morning person, maybe you have some other shift working days where you might have to get up earlier than normal. There is no avoiding this situation, which is why I present the REMEDIT patch for Fallout: New Vegas. While REMEDIT aims to provide a fullfeatured (and more convenient) version of the rambleberry quest system, this patch primarily focuses on making sure you can still complete your adventure without the aid of the rambleberries. For this reason I recommend using the patch for the first part of the quest, if you enjoy the patching and fun of it. REMEDIT includes the following features: Warp from the car to base camp if the trip takes too long. Set your waypoint to camp to teleport you there. When a NPC spawns out of a vending machine, check if you have a rambler's spoon, then throw a rambler's spoon into the vending machine. These are the "invisible resources" that you can find in the Cyclone or in the desert. Sometimes you can find rambler's spoons while inside the car, so you might want to unlock the car interior in the npc_vehicles.txt file. When using a rambler's spoon to complete the quest, right-click your waypoint in camp to teleport away. This is similar to auto-warp, but is done using a rambler's spoon

Before pregnancy, hyperprolactinemia is not a cause for concern. On the contrary, after spontaneous ovulation and during the first trimester of gestation, the hypothalamic-pituitary lactotropes become functionally suppressed and prolactin levels fall to normal. During the second and third trimesters, however, the pituitary lactotropes become hyperstimulated by gonadotropin stimulation, hyperprolactinemia emerges, and amenorrhea develops. In the third trimester of pregnancy, hyperprolactinemia inhibits parturition and can cause problems in delivery. In the second trimester, these problems can lead to cognitive impairment in the newborn. While most of the cases of hyperprolactinemia seen in the general population are idiopathic, some are due to ectopic or functional pituitary adenomas, autoimmune endocrinopathies, and other diseases that affect the hypothalamus or pituitary. Treatments for hyperprolactinemia, such as bromocriptine, have been in existence for nearly 40 years. This article reviews recent advances in the treatment of hyperprolactinemia in nonpuerperal women.Finance Minister Joe Oliver surprised observers with his aggressive approach to budgeting last year. A self-healing polymer for tissue engineering: self-repairing nanocomposites prepared using simple Michael-type addition reactions. Polymer-biomaterial hybrid materials have broad applications in tissue engineering, drug delivery and sustained-release delivery systems, and so on. Self-healing materials have recently attracted tremendous attention due to their unique biological and mechanical properties. Here, simple Michael-type addition reactions were used to design a polyurethane (PU) self-healing material that can self-repair and regenerate damaged polyurethane after exposure to various amounts of acidic or alkaline solutions. In particular, the critical role of the copolymer (L(1)-L(2) ) in the self-healing process was demonstrated. This strategy can be readily adapted to a variety of systems to prepare advanced functional materials. Microtubule dynamics regulators are reduced in ovarian cancer and regulate key processes during tumorigenesis.

Microtubules are of major importance for the regulation of cell division in mammalian cells and are also used by cancer cells to promote tumorigenesis. We have identified in a drug library screen a number of microtubule dynamics regulators that inhibit ovarian cancer cell motility. These include drugs that affect the attachment to and function of MT motor proteins such as the kinesin-like (KIF) 5 and 6 proteins that are involved in cytokinesis, as well as drugs that modulate tubulin post-translational modifications, such as CA-stabilizing drugs (CBAC-S) and drugs that reduce GTP hydrolysis at the N-terminal regulatory site of beta-tubulin (gamma-tocotrienol). Drugs included in the study were initially selected based on their ability to interfere with the tubulin post-translational modifications or their expected effect on the function of kinesin motor proteins. We show here that ovarian cancer cells are more sensitive to these drugs than normal cells, suggesting that these microtubule dynamics regulators may be a potential target for new ovarian cancer treatments. That didn't take long.
