A: I solved this problem by simply using another browser. After that, I just removed all the browser data from my account again. Q: Why I need to create multiple views when I need only one table I have a simple question: Why in most database systems I can create only one table per database? Why isn't possible to create only one table and using it for multiple purposes? A: Because multiple views do not share any tablespace and a views privileges are not as granular as a table privileges. A view defines a new alias for a set of columns in a table (see this). So for example if your view ZTEST shares the table T and you grant to it table privilege T.READ_COMMAND it still can't be used as it can't do SELECT * FROM T. But if you create a view SELECT * FROM T and grant to it table privilege T.READ_COMMAND then you can do SELECT * FROM T and no longer need to have T.READ_COMMAND.

Conformation-dependent interaction of phenazine-1-carboxylic acid with proteins. A conformational study of phenazine-1-carboxylic acid (PCA) has been undertaken in order to gain information on the role of molecular conformation in the interaction of this ligand with proteins. The short-range three-dimensional structure of PCA has been determined by proton NMR spectroscopy, X-ray diffraction, and theoretical calculations. Dimeric PCA has been prepared by acid-catalyzed coupling of propargyl- α -PCA or - β -PCA and characterized crystallographically and by NMR. The results indicate that the conformation of PCA in solution is much more labile than was previously suggested. The backbone structure of the protein binding site of hen egg-white lysozyme was investigated using circular dichroism, fluorescence, and attenuated total reflectance spectroscopy. Two binding conformers of PCA were identified for lysozyme, PCA-1 and PCA-2, as judged by their different behavior toward N-bromosuccinimide (NBS) and PCA in titrations. From the kinetics of displacement of a bound fluorophore by PCA, an affinity constant for PCA-2 of $1.9 \pm 0.3 \times 10^4$
