Komaike, Â Conventions, Comportamentos, Regras (LCR) e Ensayos Funcionais. Identification of ICAM-1/LFA-3 and VCAM-1/VLA-4 as mediators of susceptibility to West Nile virus infection in the mouse. We reported previously that plaque formation by West Nile virus in the mouse brain correlated directly with either the levels of antibodies to the envelope (E) protein or the levels of soluble E protein present in the brain. To investigate the underlying causes for the variability among animals in the levels of virus-induced immunoglobulins and soluble E protein, we tried to identify the surface molecules on cells in brain that trigger antibody- or soluble E-mediated virus infection. We first examined the cell surface receptors for both immunoglobulins and soluble E protein on fetal mouse brain cells and peripheral blood lymphocytes. The results showed that cells from both sources expressed the molecules, CD44, CD54, CD69, CD71, and CD95, and that these were functional molecules involved in cell-cell and soluble E protein/antibody interaction. Next, we examined mice carrying either the CD44- or CD54-gene-deficient backgrounds and found that the CD44-deficient mice were considerably more resistant to virus-induced disease than were the normal control mice. This result was completely reversed by reconstitution of the CD44-deficient mice with a CD44-expressing gene. Similarly, CD54-deficient mice were more susceptible than normal mice.
