The more physical a player, the greater the likelihood of being able to create a unique K-Motion that favors the type of movement he is most comfortable with. For example, a player with a set-up similar to that of a full-back's will naturally prefer to use their pace and acceleration when attacking, and cover the flank or wing with their left foot, turning with their right. Players who use the ball at the feet have a far greater range of options and can tactically adapt more easily. K-Motion Technology also helps simulate the natural flow of the game. With a player on the ball, you will see many subtle animations that are not visible when players take control. Running lines are initiated by the player's foot touching the ground, and players can make their run-in for that pass, receive the pass or start their run for another action. By having these interactive animations, the game allows players to become more immersed in the flow of the match. Aside from the traditional simulation of a player's running speed, acceleration and stopping, K-Motion technology also integrates the ability to feel more comfortable with any player. For instance, when under intense pressure from an opponent, defender may have a delayed or reduced ability to react to a pass or shoot. This is because it takes some time for the player to make a first response without feeling like they are controlling the animation. This time can be particularly impactful when facing players who are more mobile and faster than normal, such as Messi or Ronaldo, with a decision making, precision or timing advantage. FIFA World Class K-Motion Technology FIFA K-Motion technology is designed to simulate the behavior of players, the passing and shooting attributes of teammates, and the physics of the ball. It will be in the game for all game modes, from FIFA Ultimate Team to online competitions such as the UEFA Champions League and UEFA Europa League and the FIFA eWorld Cup, as well as all offline game modes such as the much-requested FIFA 22 MyClub. Technical Director Alex Huberman said: “We are dedicated to creating the most realistic football experience that exists. Now we use artificial intelligence to capture the emotion and environment of the world's game so you can enjoy it again.” Due to the complexity of the human body, in-game player AI has always featured in FIFA. From defensive positioning to player movement, player decision-making and goalkeeping, FIFA A.
