Therapies with a potent inhibitor of kinase activity for the treatment of non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) harboring the BRAF V600E mutation have shown promising results. Here we describe a resistant case in which the secondary mutational hotspot, BRAF L597R, was identified as the resistance mechanism to dabrafenib. To identify secondary mutational hotspots in combination with dabrafenib, we performed next-generation sequencing (NGS) of the tumor tissue of a patient who responded to multiple lines of anticancer chemotherapy for NSCLC harboring the BRAF V600E mutation. NGS detected several secondary mutational hotspots in the tumor tissue (T790M, D594G, E588A/D, T599I, T599R, and L597R), in which L597R was identified as the resistance mechanism to dabrafenib. To verify the mechanism of resistance to dabrafenib, we investigated cell signaling pathways in the patient's tumor cells. Compared with H1975, the dabrafenib-resistant cells showed remarkable differences in the signaling pathways, especially with regard to the activation of the phosphatidylinositol 3
