DualBootKey is a free app that helps you detect. Password Cracking is Fully Portable, so you can protect your files. Comparison of a panel of in vitro micronucleus tests for the assessment of genotoxic and clastogenic/aneugenic potential in human lymphocytes. A comparative evaluation of the sensitivity of in vitro micronucleus and comet assays for the detection of genotoxic and clastogenic/aneugenic activity in human lymphocytes was conducted. Two genotoxic compounds, the antitumor agent doxorubicin (DOX) and the topoisomerase II inhibitor etoposide (ETP), and three chemically different clastogens, mitomycin C (MMC), γ -radiation and hydroxyurea (HU) were tested in the in vitro micronucleus assay, and clastogenicity and chromosome damage in the comet assay. In the micronucleus assay, the mean rate of micronucleus induction (MI) by mitomycin C (7.76 \pm 1.84 per thousand) was significantly higher (pMMC (3.91 \pm 0.64) $>$ DOX (3.46 \pm 0.80) $>$ ETP (3.23 \pm 0.65)). However, no significant difference was detected between the mean rate of chromosome breaks (CBs) by MMC (3.81 \pm 0.86 per thousand) and HU (4.15 \pm 0.89 per thousand), and the mean rate of chromatid exchange (CE) by MMC (3.89 \pm 0.95 per thousand) and ETP (4.16 \pm 0.93 per thousand). These results suggest that the micronucleus assay is a more sensitive test for the detection of micronucleus induction by genotoxic compounds than the comet assay. 595f342e71
