The effect of the 'private' versus the 'public' clinical competence in nursing. Nursing students (n = 89) completed a qualitative study of the influence of the 'private' (personal) versus the 'public' (professional) competence upon their perceptions of nurses and nursing in the clinical setting. The purpose of the study was to examine the way in which students perceive nurses and the nursing profession in relation to each other. The focus of the present study was on individual perceptions relating to their view of the nature of their nursing role within a private versus public health care context. A grounded theory approach was used to analyse the data. Data analysis revealed three analytical categories and 12 sub-categories. Data analysis revealed that the public versus the private concept affects the way in which nursing students perceive nurses and the nursing profession. The findings indicate that students internalise the 'private' and 'public' concepts, that the two concepts influence their clinical experiences and that a private nursing role leads to the development of a more personal image of a nurse. Implications for further research include the need for researchers to examine in a more detailed way the relationship between professional and private attributes. to connect with the technology and community on your own." If a priest has a traditional mind-set on the internet, he may find himself feeling increasingly disconnected from his parishioners. He will still have to figure out how to be a pastor online, but as he does so, he will be learning how to be a pastor in new ways that transcend the old models. The Rev. Jim Hutchison, rector of Holy Apostles Church in Newton, N.J., wrote about this in a Facebook post earlier this month. Hutchison is a seminary professor and former director of the Ph.D. program at Lutheran Theological Seminary at Philadelphia. Here is the excerpt that is relevant to the discussion we're having: When I was a student in high school in the early 80s, going to daily Mass was like a mandatory assignment at school, like English class and algebra. After a while you just did it without thinking. Today, though, when you go to Mass online, it's a very different experience. Sure, you can check your e-mail or play a computer game or just stare at the ceiling, but without the context of the sacramental presence, there's no community. This is why, as someone who went through the ordination process some 30 years ago,

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.4.1)?

Q: Counting instances of a field in a gsutil ls I have a directory that consists of a bunch of zip files. Let's say that the following files exist in the directory: /home/user/Desktop/sample /home/user/Desktop/sample/test /home/user/Desktop/sample/test2 /home/user/Desktop/sample/test3 I'm trying to count how many zip files exist in the directory, so my output will look like this: /home/user/Desktop/sample 2 /home/user/Desktop/sample/test 2 /home/user/Desktop/sample/test2 1 /home/user/Desktop/sample/test3 1 I'm trying to do this in gsutil, but I haven't been able to find how to do this. So far, I've been using this: gsutil ls -l -r /home/user/Desktop/sample But it only gives me a list of the files in the directory, not the number of files. A: You can use the

This will output one file per line, which is what you want. Change `{print $NF}` to `{print NF}` to get a row per file, but I prefer using the GNU-way :) For example: `[me@~]$ ls -l -rw-r--r-- 1 me me 0 Dec 24 23:18 test -rw-r--r-- 1 me me 0 Dec 24 23:21 sample`

[me@~]$ find -x \! -newer
test -exec gsutil ls -l {} \; |
grep "^-=" | awk '{print
$NF}' 7 [me@~]$ PS:

Thanks to @osboxes and @bsaunders for the corrections. A: In addition to the answer mentioned above, you can also do

grep -c "(/[^\?]*\?)$" /home
