Open any image and press the Save menu's Save As button, or right-click on the photo and choose Save As. A dialog box appears. If the file is a TIFF or PSD file, you see a dialog box similar to Figure 14-13, left. Q: How to choose between NoSQL and MySQL? I am working on a web application which has the following structure A user creates a group The group has members Member logs in Member uploads a list of books To store this data I am currently using MySQL. Should I use MySQL, or MongoDB, or should I use a NoSQL solution such as Redis and store all of the lists in there and have a script ping through and grab these documents one by one? A: In my experience, having a bunch of small files in my SQL Server application on my local machine works just fine. I have been able to hit that same local server up to 500+ times/second when other RESTful APIs request those items. In fact, it rarely even gets served out of memory; just lots of threads tend to fire as needed. Larger amounts of data are an entirely different story. Now I have a separate machine dedicated to SQL Server which is configured as a clustered SQL Server instance. We can get up to about 3.6M readers/second (with an average of about 150K requests) when our RDMBS (Counters, OLTP, High Availability) is up on the cloud. As the system moved towards the area of the Leeward Islands, it began to pass the north coast of Puerto Rico. Hurricane-force winds were observed on Puerto Rico from September 30 to October 1, but Colin weakens quickly and is last noted on October 2 while passing near Antigua and Barbuda.
