Photoshop Elements is a software option that creates and edits digital photographs. It doesn't offer as many bells and whistles as Photoshop, but many people find it to be a sufficient image editing tool for what they need. It is available at most all major online retail sites. Moving to Lightroom In addition to Photoshop and Elements, Adobe also offers a way to create and manipulate photographs that doesn't require Photoshop at all. Lightroom, launched in 2007, is a different program than Photoshop or Elements, but it is still a significant contribution to the world of digital photography. By utilizing a new type of digital photograph called RAW, Lightroom can bring back images from the darkroom era with tools and features that enable even the most novice photographer to make sophisticated edits with ease. RAW stands for "radiance-accurate." RAW files contain a high-quality recording of a photo's light itself, regardless of any changes made to the color or tone. RAW files can be imported into Photoshop or Lightroom and manipulated like any other image. The big question for beginners is which program, Photoshop or Lightroom, to choose. Both are usable for beginners. However, for people who need greater versatility, Photoshop is more powerful and more versatile than Lightroom is. Lightroom is a fairly simple and easy-to-use program that can produce good-looking images. But it doesn't offer as many advanced editing features as Photoshop does. Figure 8-6 shows a comparison of the two programs. You can click any image to see it larger. Photoshop, Lightroom, and the web The web, and the World Wide Web in particular, has changed the way we shop. More importantly, it has changed the way we consume media, especially digital media. The web has fundamentally changed the media industry. Newspapers are being bought and sold online, television programs are being streamed online via the web, and the newspaper classifieds are expanding into the online world. As the media world becomes more integrated, it becomes more and more important to familiarize yourself with the tools needed to access, publish, and disseminate media. Photoshop and Lightroom are being used in an increasing number of new web-based projects. Much more than other photo editing programs, they're being used to make site design and content more engaging, visually more creative, and more engaging as a whole. Using Photoshop and Lightroom online Modern web design is a very attractive and visual art

Such implants can be used as artificial joints for replacing diseased or damaged natural joints, such as in the human knee or hips. They can also be used for facial reconstruction, spinal reconstruction, and other reconstruction, including corneal reconstruction. It is customary for implants to include bone or other hard tissue material (e.g., ceramics) on the exterior of the implant to be in contact with a surface in the body (e.g., bone) into which the implant is inserted. Exemplary types of implants include those known as total knee replacements (“TKR”), unicompartmental knee replacements (“UKR”), and unicompartmental knee replacements (“UKR”). It is known to secure the implant to the bone by press-fitting or by cementing. Articular surfaces of implants are typically prepared to be orthogonal or parallel to the implant’s mechanical axis. In particular, the articular surfaces are often prepared to be perpendicular to the mechanical axis of the femur or tibia into which the implant is inserted. However, in natural joints such as the human knee, the articular surfaces of natural femoral condyles and tibial eminences are not always perpendicular or parallel to the mechanical axis. In the absence of parallel or orthogonal articular surfaces, the contact area between the articular surface of an implant and the proximal or distal femur or tibia is less than the contact area in a natural joint. Additionally, improper articulation often leads to further post-operative functional problems. Consequently, there

ORLANDO, FLA. (WSVN) - Two thieves in the same neighborhood who were caught thanks to an alert security camera likely will be locked up together. According to the Florida Department of Corrections, surveillance cameras recorded two burglars breaking into the same house on the same night, and the same picture of them was released to local police. That led to an arrest just a couple days later. Just a few hours after the first burglary, another home was broken into. While there are similarities in the two burglaries, the person responsible for breaking into the home in the 6300 block of Sugar Creek Road used a sledgehammer to steal a safe from the house. Surveillance footage captured four suspects breaking into the home in the 200 block of Southwest 23rd Court on the night of Sept. 26. The thieves busted into the home on the same night, but the house break-in happened earlier than the house next door where a safe was stolen, according to officers. "We took both. One was safe, one was some jewelry. We took them all," said Orlando Police Department's public information officer Stephen Heacock. That burglary happened less than a half-hour after a burglary at the home on Sugar Creek Road. "It could have happened 20 minutes before, right in the next block," said Officer Heacock. The burglary on Sugar Creek Road was caught by the homeowner's security cameras. The homeowner told 7News, the person who tried to break into his home had already been in the neighborhood before he moved in. The homeowner says the armed suspects could not find a way into his home because he had installed a security system that only allows him into his house. "I have insurance, I was just going to get a new home. And then I heard about
