1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a mold for forming a sintered ceramic member, which mold comprises an upper mold and a lower mold, and which mold is applied to a molding die in which a forming material is compressed to form a block shaped sintered ceramic material, and in which the upper mold and the lower mold are brought into contact with each other by applying a pressure to a forming material which is injected in a predetermined amount.

2. Description of the Related Art In a conventional method for forming a sintered ceramic member, a block shaped sintered ceramic material is prepared by providing a molding die having a predetermined forming surface, injecting a forming material to the molding die, and applying a pressure to the forming material from an upper mold and a lower mold, whereby the forming material is compressed and injected in a predetermined amount. The mold provided in the molding die comprises an upper mold and a lower mold, and a portion of the lower mold is an elastic body which can be expanded. In the conventional mold, the elastic lower mold is arranged on a bottom of a pressure chamber of a pressure applying mechanism, and the pressure chamber is arranged between an upper surface of the lower mold and a forming surface of the molding die. By injecting the forming material in a predetermined amount in the pressure chamber, and by applying a pressure to the forming material from the upper and lower molds, the forming material is injected and compressed in a block shaped sintered ceramic material, and this block shaped sintered ceramic material is transferred out of the pressure chamber. In the above-mentioned mold, the elastic body of the lower mold is provided on the bottom of the pressure chamber. When a large amount of the forming material is injected and compressed
