WASHINGTON — Metro is exploring a range of options to help curb hours-long waits on the system, including the possibility of one-way, instead of round-trip, commuting on certain days, the transit agency said. Metro added that in some instances, riders could choose their buses and trains. The proposed options are part of the transit agency's overall push to cut travel times in response to the storm that caused severe damage to parts of the system. While Metro has dealt with numerous problems - including power outages and escalator malfunctions - it has also dealt with 30-minute waits for the B and Yellow lines. Metro board member Jack Evans said the board's skepticism about the one-way option is likely due to the system's highly polarized politics, but he said it is worth exploring. "I hope to God that we don't get stuck in one-way only," he said. "The purpose of this would be to get out more people d0c515b9f4
