This subproject is one of many research subprojects utilizing the resources provided by a Center grant funded by NIH/NCRR. The subproject and investigator (PI) may have received primary funding from another NIH source, and thus could be represented in other CRISP entries. The institution listed is for the Center, which is not necessarily the institution for the investigator. The purpose of this study was to determine whether a unique variation, Glu2156Asp (E2156D) of the kappa-opioid receptor (KOR) gene is related to treatment response in depressed patients and to elucidate its biological implications. During the year of 05, we developed an assay to specifically quantify the amount of KORs in the brain. We have assessed the levels of Glu2156Asp KORs in the blood of treatment-resistant depressed patients and determined their relative abundances in vitro. From these results, we have found a correlation between the abnormally low levels of E2156D KORs in vitro and in vivo in depressed subjects.[Acute abdominal pain]. Acute abdominal pain is a common problem in general practice. Misinterpretation of clinical features can cause unnecessary hospitalisation and tests, exposing patients to further unnecessary test, risk and expense. The basic model of care in an acute abdominal pain-case is structured according to a multidisciplinary approach. Standard management of an acute abdominal pain-case includes collaboration between a general practitioner and specialist in abdominal pain-care. The diagnosis should be established as quickly as possible in order to reduce unnecessary hospitalisations. A diagnostic approach should be performed in which diagnostic tests are ordered based on the suspected diagnosis and clinical presentation. According to the results of the investigations, the management strategy should be determined. The main conclusion of this structured diagnostic procedure is that patients with a stable presentation can be managed in general practice. After being tested at the specialist level, patients who have a clearly defined condition should be managed in general practice. If the diagnosis is uncertain, or if the condition of the patient is unstable, the patient should be treated in an outpatient department.

[A retrospective analysis of changes in intravenous heparin dosage during dialysis]. Intravenous heparin (IVH) has become a frequently-used anticoagulant during dialysis. In the author's center, the aim of the IVH regimen was to maintain activated partial thromboplastin time (aPTT) at 40-60 sec. The frequency of IVH administration has increased from 18.2% in 1993 to 54.3% in 2000. The dosage of heparin (Ufa) was calculated by an indirect coagulation method using the Mark III Hemostasis Analyzer (Artemis, Alameda, CA, USA). Of the 187 patients (121 males, 66 females) undergoing dialysis between 1993 and 2000, 135 (72.6%) were treated with low dose IVH (Ufa 1.2-1.7 U/kg/h) and 52 (27.4%) with high dose IVH (Ufa 1.8-2.7 U/kg/h). With low dose IVH, the actual Ufa was, on average, 42.5 +/- 12.2%, which was significantly lower than the expected Ufa of 53.9 +/- 10.5%. The actual Ufa with high dose IVH was, on average, 68.2 +/- 12.0%, which was significantly higher than the expected Ufa of 64.0 +/- 10.1%. Analysis of these values revealed that the actual Ufa of high dose IVH was insufficient in 3.9%, and excessively high in 5.4%. When the highest actual Ufa was compared with the upper limit of the expected Ufa calculated by linear regression analysis, the actual Ufa was less than that expected (mean - 0.77 U/kg/h). This phenomenon was prominent in patients undergoing dialysis for an extended period. Such variations in Ufa during dialysis may not always be the result of incorrect medication.The present invention relates to a new and distinct cultivar of Lavandula, botanically known as Lavandula stoechas and hereinafter referred to by the name 'Zanri Lumin'. The new Lavandula is a product of a planned breeding program conducted by the inventor in Glencoe, Ill. The objective of the breeding program is to create new Lavandula cultivars with numerous flowers and attractive foliage coloration.
