Groupon Falls to No. 131 on Sales Growth Post IPO - guruz ===== frisco I don't doubt that Groupon would have made money in the future, as long as they invested heavily in continuing to build out their deal-hunting network. Once that's done, they'll probably be fine. However, in the short term, it's hard to know whether investors were overpaying for Groupon based on whether they had long-term money, or just a sense of bullish euphoria surrounding the IPO. As a small startup, investors probably saw this as a first step towards a real business to be built out over time, and Groupon just doesn't have that much room to grow right now. ~~~ jhancock "get into the deals" which was the theme of the IPO, is not a long-term play for the company. They get into deals now, then beat on their customers for profits 3-6 months later.
