Normalcy: The Normadine 5461 Normadine5461pdf28 Normalcy: The Normadine 5461Ion-induced conversion of a magnesium halide perovskite into a halide perovskite. Interaction between a magnesium and a halide at a metal-halide interface leads to the formation of a Mg-X alloy. This interaction thus provides an important bottom-up approach to the design of new oxide electronic materials. Here, we present the successful formation of cesium lead halide perovskites (PbX₃, X = Cl, Br, I) by the exposure of the Mg-Br alloy (Mg_{0.999}Br_{0.001}) to a high-pressure gaseous mixture of PbI₂ and X. The Mg-Br alloy is a "mixed-metal" solution, which consists of a dissolved Mg²⁺ cation and surface-stabilized MgBr₂X₂⁺ (X = Cl, Br) complex ions. Exposure to the appropriate gaseous species results in the formation of iodide perovskites in a chemical vapor deposition (CVD) growth mode. The effectiveness of this approach is demonstrated by the preparation of cubic CsPbBr₃ and cubic CsPbI₃ perovskite crystals. Notably, further ion exchange reactions among the surface MgBr₂X₂⁺ complexes are highly effective in converting the Mg-Br alloy into an ordered tetragonal Mgl₂-Br
