Accurately define the quality of their connection by choosing the appropriate Call or Data plan. * Configure the maximum length of the call * Set up the conversion of a shortcoming in a phone number by having the correct application. * Dial using the internal numbers of the application * Enter the information required when making

Pinger is a simple, yet powerful multi-listener network monitor for Windows that creates TCP and UDP ping sessions on the target computers to check for a connection, open ports, or monitor port characteristics (no-reply time). Pinger can be a useful tool in network troubleshooting or for forensic purposes because of its unique ability to send multiple packets with different sizes and/or strings to the port being checked. Pinger is able to send the connection attempts from a list. Pinger generates detailed reports for the results of the connections. pinger can be applied as an alternative to the standard ping utility. Pinger Features: - Network monitor, ping can be sent from a list of computers or ports - ICMP, echo-request, echo-reply and fragmentation packets - Support for advanced ICMP packet options - Can use wildcard patterns - Send packets from a list - IPv4/IPv6 packets - Ping as a process - Send fragmented packets - Ping a range of ports at the same time - Use agent to automatically start pinging - View reports in different formats - Use with the program

The pinger is a simple application that tells you when someone is calling you. It can easily be used in a professional setting, or if your child is mischievous enough to play some pranks on you. As soon as you install pinger, you will be greeted by a splash screen that contains a countdown timer. Each time a new call arrives, the timer will get a few seconds closer to its end. When the timer hits 0, the program displays information about the currently received call. As you may know, some phones use a strategy to conserve their battery; when they determine that someone has been calling you, they will hang up and put on a low battery display, which will last until you answer the call. Pinger provides the user with a warning before that happens, so you can answer the call when you are done with that task, avoiding an interruption in the battery mode and possible data losses. The application can run in the background and will notify you when there is a call. Some features: ? Ability to set the number of reminders before actually getting the call ? Support for calls from landline and cell phones. ? Ability to have 2 custom ringtones ? Ability to set a ringtone for the missed call (if the phone is turned on) ? Ability to set up a custom SMS when receiving a call ? Ability to choose which reminders should appear as scheduled calls ? Ability to choose which reminders should ring even when the phone is switched off ? Ability to set up a password for the app, using which the reminder will disappear ? Ability to get a weekly and daily view of your reminder list. Pinger is a simple and intuitive program that does exactly what it says. Its behavior and operation is fairly straightforward, though it may not be ideal for very low-tech devices. All in all, pinger is a nice application that you will find quite useful. Roccat GameaTool is a gaming application that is supposed to give you control over the design of your gaming mouse. The tool is divided into several parts, with each part containing various controls and options. Every option is geared towards a particular area of the mouse such as sensitivity, DPI, buttons, DPI scaling, axis scaling, color of the face, the side buttons configuration, the scroll wheel. The design and performance of the tool is flawless. We couldn't find
