I have been having intermittent claudication (intermittent aching in the legs, usually associated with walking), since I was about 25. This has been progressive, but sometimes has a degree of balance (walking especially from a standing position is very uncomfortable). I have had biophysical tests (taped ankles, flexor and plantar exertion and distal pulses) and my ischemic times of onset are about 2 - 3 seconds, and duration of pain may be between 3 - 30 seconds, usually lasting for about a minute. Tests on both of my feet show normally reduced blood flow through the leg arteries. I have been treated by my GP with anti-platelets and am on Aspirin on a daily basis. I have just had a Doppler ultrasound test, and it showed a small internal carotid aneurysm. I have had an angiogram which showed no significant coronary artery stenosis, however the aortic arch was dilated. After the anuagram, I was experiencing marked lower limb muscle soreness, so was admitted to hospital. I was of course closely monitored. This then resolved after about 2 weeks. My GP has referred me to a vascular surgeon, but am reluctant to go ahead for fear of developing a massive aneurysm, and also of long-term bleeding problems. I have heard of Takayasu's disease, and this is what my GP has suggested, but I have not been able to find out more about it. I do have a strong family history, and a sister suffers from Raynaud's phenomenon, although a more severe and disabling one. Has anyone had experience with Takayasu's disease and/or intermittent claudication? I would appreciate any d0c515b9f4
