FIFA 22 will be available on the PlayStation 4, Xbox One, Nintendo Switch, Windows PC, macOS and Linux on September 27. Tag Archives: desert Shortly before the big game, a country hit by harsh desert temperatures in east Africa is struggling to care for its drought-hit people. Maasai Mara has been a tourist favourite for over a hundred years. While some travellers from the West have used the park to stroll along the path of the wildebeest migration, most tourists head straight to the corner where the best game viewing is found. The beauty of the Mara can be seen from a large distance. The plethora of wildlife that inhabit the park, which borders Tanzania, Kenya and Somalia, include the desert rhino, birds of prey such as the white and spotted vulture and a vast variety of gazelles, zebras and wildebeests. Between 15 and 30 million tourists visit the park each year and more than a quarter of a million cars travel through each month. At least six million of these people are locals from the outskirts of the park who earn a living from the tourism industry and from selling goods in nearby towns and villages. The success of the Mara tourism industry has resulted in the detrimental overgrazing of an area estimated to cover at least 36,000 sq km – an area larger than the entire country of Scotland. The long term effects of overgrazing on the park’s wildlife is cause for concern. While the rhino population has increased recently, the decline in numbers of spotted vultures has been dramatic. In 2012, fewer than 50 were counted. This has resulted in areas of the desert covered in poisonous scorpions and deadly cobras. The reserve used to be home to a population of more than half a million zebras but numbers have dropped dramatically as game is drawn to the often-busy roads. Numbers of white-tailed and Grant’s gazelles have also dropped, with the latter being particularly vulnerable. As the number of wildebeests and zebras has dropped, the number of zebras has increased. This has led to conflict as domestic livestock are occasionally grazed on the reserve. The lions, which are more well-protected, are struggling as their prey numbers have fallen. In response to this, the lions’ diet has shifted to eating domestic pigs and they have started to kill humans too. During the
