Field of the Invention This invention relates to apparatus and methods for playing digital information media of various kinds and more particularly, to apparatus and methods for playing information media using personal computers. 2. Description of Related Art The conventional method of playing a computerized music includes the steps of retrieving a digital recording such as a CD from a library, loading the digital recording to a hard disk of a personal computer, extracting audio data from the digital recording with a decoder circuit, and playing the digital data through a speaker or an amplifier. A preferred way to play an information medium is to play it on a medium capable of random access, such as a hard disk. A disk is read and played continuously until the end of the disk. The capability of random access allows playing of a desired track in a random manner, which can play a piece of music rather quickly. However, when a disk is read for playback, the entire disk is read even if only one piece of music is desired. Consequently, the time required for read-out is comparatively long. In a case in which the digital recording is a record of an orchestra concert or a movie, the contents of the whole recording are to be loaded in order to listen to only a single piece of music.

Moreover, when the digital recording is a record of an orchestra concert or a movie, the entire disk must be processed so as to limit access to desired tracks. This is because, even if access to only the desired track is limited, access to an undesired track which had been skipped is always possible. Furthermore, to make a disk playable, the information on the disk must be encoded, and the decoding has to be performed in a personal computer. Such an operation is not simple.Pages Sunday, January 8, 2012 Another Asher Yatzem "Assistance for Asher Yatzem" is the new term that we learned on last Thursday.
