Motion capture records the movements of over 22 players during a real football match. Players are tracked in real-time with up to 5,000 different high-precision measurements. The data from these movements is passed along to the AI engine, which creates over 175,000 AI-controlled players in total. “We constantly strive to raise the bar for football games and use the most advanced technologies to deliver the most authentic football experience yet,” said Ian Livingstone, President of EA Sports. “By using our world-class team of developers and unique motion capture technology, FIFA has delivered the most realistic football experiences. “ The analysis of the user data has been handled by a team in the FIFA Team on PlayStation 4 to ensure it is accurate and that all features are ready for launching next month. The live match data and engine will be deployed to the FIFA Team website on June 15 to allow people to test features and to create feedback for the development team. Easily customizable Each player in FIFA 22 has an extensive array of skills, talents and attributes. Once registered, players can design their player customizations based on the attributes they choose, including hair and skin tone, height, shape and weight. Skill boosts provide players with a range of unique abilities, allowing them to excel in different situations. For example, a fast player that prefers to use his pace and burst could improve his game by choosing the boost Quick Charger. Movement The simulation of player movement and ball control has been improved with ‘Hybrid Dribbling’, which combines both unpredictable player controls and individual player behaviours. The improved ball physics results in more intelligent and realistic ball movement, with players able to change direction more fluidly and therefore become more unpredictable. The new Trajectory Control System sees players now react intelligently to on-ball actions by changing direction more fluidly as they control the ball. Unpredictable on-ball movements have been improved, allowing ball-carriers to evade pressure more easily. Improved player reactions The improved camera system allows players to see players making their individual movements, which gives a new insight into player movement. Adjusted controls Previous editions of FIFA required a dedicated thumb stick to control the pitch. FIFA 22 introduces expanded controls. They include the ability to configure these controls to a player’s preferences using the revamped Play Style
