Adobe Photoshop CC: Use Photoshop to create and edit images. See the nearby sidebar "Gain access to a ton of new ways to customize your work" for info on a Creative Cloud upgrade to Photoshop that provides new features and workflow enhancements. Adobe Photoshop Elements: Create, edit, and crop photographs. It's a good choice for those who work with photos, and it's the Photoshop alternative that most people know. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom: Edit and manage photos. Lightroom is the Photoshop alternative that many photographers prefer to Photoshop Elements for managing their photos, and it's the front-runner for many new photographers who are interested in using the software. Adobe Photoshop Elements 6: Create and edit raster images (for example, photos) and vector (for example, illustrations). Unfortunately, Elements is no longer updated for new features. However, for the time being, it's a fine program for beginners. Freeform: A free version of Photoshop that has a reduced set of features. However, it still offers you the ability to work on both raster images and vector images. If you're starting out, you should check out this program. Photoshop Elements 5: A much older, and less popular, version of Photoshop. However, it does offer several free plug-ins for you to use. Photoshop Express: A free image-editing program that has many of the same features as Photoshop. The GIMP: Another free photo editor. It's not as popular as Photoshop, but it offers a lot of power. Illustrator: A vector-editing program. Illustrator is perfect for creating Illustrator (see Step 8), which is Adobe Illustrator's sibling program. # Gain access to a ton of new ways to customize your work The Creative Cloud upgrade for Photoshop offers a lot of new and useful features and tools that were previously unavailable to the normal user. The upgrade enables you to access your Creative Cloud projects online and view, share, and publish project files to the web, your Creative Cloud desktop applications, and to mobile devices. When you're working on a project, you can also access the same features whether you're at your computer or on a smart phone. For example, you can create a project on one device and

About The Roman Statues Project is a long term archaeological project that has been steadily building up momentum since 2006. At its heart is an excavation of the Roman forum and Roman era temple of Aphrodite. The project in its initial form was a large-scale reconstruction and excavation of the ancient Roman temple of Aphrodite in a derelict area of London's Docklands area, and has yielded significant results, finding the entrance to an underground chamber that dates to the 2nd or 3rd century AD. The excavation and subsequent research are being conducted by specialist architects and an archaeologist. The project was first established with the support of London's Cultural Olympiad. As the project moved into the heritage sector, the project has grown, and now involves a number of institutions, including the Museum of London, the British Museum, the Institute of Archaeology, the Portable Antiquities Scheme and the British Museum, and it is one of very few projects in the UK to be supported by the Heritage Lottery Fund, through the Major Heritage Projects scheme. The team has worked with a number of experts including the Australian archaeologist Professor John de Vleeschauwer, and the honorary Deputy High Priest of Aphrodite in Athens in Greece for Greek and Roman Aphrodite, a priestess, named Helena Tzergler. The project will continue to follow the initial strategy to aim to rebuild the main structure of the temple, in order to reveal more of its past life. But the team has been encouraged in the development of new activities, which include various temporary exhibitions of photographs and images of the recent excavations. The project's aim is to promote the ancient site and its associated artefacts through public displays. The project has gained a large following and supporters, which it should be noted that it has done so without the support of any of the major archaeological institutions, which have in some cases passed on the opportunity to purchase the statues, texts and other material currently on display. The Roman Statues Project is not a school project, a private venture, nor a charitable foundation. It is a community-based project that is seeking funding to continue with the latest developments, and believes it is an essential part of London's cultural development. It is not to be confused with the equally fascinating and large-scale re-creation of the main ancient Roman forum in Rome, known as the Via Ostiense. The Project has two main aims. First,
