Impact of a triple oral contraceptive containing drospirenone on gynecological symptoms. To evaluate the impact of a triple oral contraceptive (OC) containing drospirenone on daily symptoms of the lower abdomen and genito-urinary system in a prospective study. One thousand and eleven women (aged 19 to 44 years) completed the Daily Pregnancy Symptom Questionnaire (DPSQ) at baseline and after 1 year of OC use (Lazarin, 200 mg levonorgestrel; 2 mg ethinylestradiol). Overall, at 12 months of OC use, 17.2% of women reported no lower abdomen symptoms; 39.7% reported one symptom; 24.8% reported two symptoms, and 16.1% reported three or more symptoms. On DPSQ question 5, 9.8% of women reported fecal incontinence, 35.8% reported increased abdominal bloating, 34.3% reported at least one pelvic pain episode, and 16.8% reported at least one vaginal bleeding episode. Irregular vaginal bleeding ($P=0.04$) and increased abdominal bloating ($P=0.0001$) were the main DPSQ symptoms during the study. Irregular vaginal bleeding was reported by 12.1% of patients, and increased abdominal bloating was reported by 33.8%. No severe abnormal bleeding was reported during the study. Our results indicate that OCs containing drospirenone are effective in controlling gynecological symptoms, even though the perception of bleeding disorders and adverse effects is high. "We are thankful for the results of the election, but the new House Democratic majority will not cooperate with the President on anything to achieve his agenda. To get anything meaningful done, the President must first deliver on the promises he made and the America he said he wants to govern. Without that, the Congress must be willing to seriously act on his behalf, regardless of the political consequences." ADVERTISEMENT Democrats have sought to impeach Trump since before he became president and a number of lawmakers and lawmakers-elect have called for impeachment proceedings. "The House Democratic
