For low end work, I like GIMP, although it's not as easy to use as Photoshop. * * * Powerful A tool is considered powerful when it can do a lot of work quickly. Photoshop has a place for those who want to take photos of great detail and quickly create a great-looking composite, or collage, of those photos. Crafty Many photographers spend hours selecting and retouching their images to create the perfect image. They add layers of text, paint, and so on in Photoshop, that are designed to pull the best aspects of each photo together. Photoshop can be used to make everyone look great in a photo. Or you can use Photoshop to enhance a photo by selectively removing or obscuring unwanted elements. Moderate A tool that can be used for quick photo editing and retouching to correct a particular problem is considered a moderate tool. For example, if you need to remove a little of someone's chin or a chair leg, a moderate tool is the right one. Handy A handy tool that is easy to learn and has many uses is often considered less powerful than those tools that are just powerful. This handy tool lets you do stuff with your photos, like crop, resize, and rotate them, while keeping the best parts. Keep your new skill levels in mind when you consider which editing program is right for you. Expert Most professional images require considerable skill and experience to create. Only an expert program like Photoshop can deal with the amount of precision required. Photoshop's Potential Photoshop has great potential in its range of uses, including: Cropping: As an image editing application, Photoshop is great for using what's in the middle of your image instead of the entire picture. This technique is called cropping. Cropping means adding white space to an image and either pasting or cutting that space out of the image. Image adjustments: Photoshop has an extensive range of tools for making adjustments that fine-tune the look of your images. These include, for example, lens correction, brightness and contrast, and exposure. You can look at Photoshop as a kind of spotlight — if you're not at green, your adjustments are likely to be too dark or light. Image composition: Photoshop is great for assembling a collage of images. These images may be used in web pages or printed as photo books.

What's New In?

Even More Product Updates Adam Minden Updates This February, we saw two new custom-fit trousers launch to the Basic and Heritage collections. Now, we're excited to announce that the Heritage trousers will soon be joined by the Heritage Dress Shirt. The Heritage Dress Shirt is a simple yet timeless addition to the Heritage and Basic collections. We're also excited to announce the launch of the Adam® Future-Beam Construction™ (FBC®) Laundry Belt. This innovative belt is designed to eliminate pockets from the figure of a high-waisted washable cotton or polyester pants suit, allowing the wearer to keep their pants much shorter and their pockets much fewer. FBC® outdoes standards by employing a corded web belt system created using a new, high-end, proprietary three-stage process that we call Process-Driven™. This patented 'corded web belt' system is engineered to be comfortable to wear, yet durable. Moreover, the highly breathable fabric is, incredibly, yet ironically, washable. This feature is accomplished by a Corded-webbing system that allows for the stretch of the fabric to remain the same even after repeated washings. We are very excited about this new product innovation, and are excited to continue our journey with you, our customers, and new, innovative ways to provide new solutions and find new solutions to our customers' apparel needs. Q: Using scope with jgrid child scope I have a scope like this: var App = App || {}; App.newShopScope = function() { var scope = {}, data = {}; scope.baseUrl = App.baseUrl; scope.userId = App.id; return scope; }; In the jqGrid configuration file I do something like this: var grid = $("#grid_id").jqGrid({ datatype: 'json', mtype: 'GET', url: baseUrl + '/controller', colModel: [...], pager: S("#grid_pager_id"), loadError: function(xhr, textStatus, errorThrown) { if (text
