The following are a few of the ways FIFA HyperMotion Technology impacts gameplay in Fifa 22 Full Crack: Improved Interceptions and Turnovers The improved passing options and ball control have already seen a noticeable improvement in my gameplay. How can I turn it into a tactical advantage? Ability to use the ball more quickly and correctly. Take the goalkeeper out of the equation and replace him with a sentient lobbing machine. It's a bit unnatural but still a smart strategy. Small ball mastery. No longer will you be penalized for holding onto the ball for too long. Or for throwing it toward your own goal in an attempt to find an open teammate. Improved momentum changes. You can now change the ball direction with a spin pass or a fancy foot pass. The latter is particularly useful when the two opponent attackers are dueling near the goal line. Offside-based ref-assisted player movement. After the player receives the ball, the offside call is revealed. If he is about to attempt a pass, he is no longer able to carry on with the play, even if the player is outside of the box. On the other hand, if you want to dribble the ball into space and bring out the cross, you can do so knowing the on-ball ref will be annoyed with your tactics. Shorter Receiving Chances You can start each match with a precise tactical overview on the pitch and a real-time situation view that highlights the enemy's positioning (the pitch even flares to show you the team positions before the first pass). How can I use this advantage? Not only will it become more difficult to complete the first-time pass in a high-intensity gameplay situation, but it will be more difficult to beat the pressing defender and find an opening. Improved shot and set-piece chances. With the digital perfection that is AI-based, goalkeepers are like a free diving robot that you can send down from the top of the stadium. The AI now moves according to the goalkeeper's positioning, which is based on where the ball last touched the grass. Also, taking a low-risk, unguarded set piece is now a viable tactical option.
