As a transmission/reception radio wave forming device for use in such a system, it is required to have a low loss in transmission, a stable gain characteristic and an attenuation characteristic in its attenuation range. To meet such requirements, the inventors of the present invention have proposed a transmission/reception radio wave forming device comprising a transmitting circuit having a plurality of series-connected field effect transistors, a plurality of attenuators having a characteristic determined based on a control signal derived from a control voltage applied to the gates of the transistors, each of the attenuators including a plurality of cascaded inverter circuits, and a receiving circuit having an amplifying characteristic determined based on a control signal derived from a control voltage applied to the gates of the transistors, each of the amplifying
